

Welcome to Port Wakefield

WHERE IS PORT WAKEFIELD?

Port Wakefield is a progressive coastal town of the Adelaide Plains. The town is located approximately 100 kilometres North of Adelaide, South Australia. It is serviced by a dual lane highway, which carries approximately 7500 to 8000 vehicles a day through the Eastern edge of the town. It is seen as a major transportation corridor for both commercial and domestic travellers and provides numerous services to support such an industry. The town itself is a hidden treasure. Little do people realise that a few hundred metres east of the transport corridor, there is a township steeped in colonial history that sits on the coast of the upper reaches of Gulf St Vincent. It was a town created to cater for the needs of the early settlers. With the development of the agricultural, mining and later the fishing industries of South Australia, Port Wakefield became the pivot point for such products. A port was developed to cater for the increased production of such commodities as ore from the mines at Burra, hay and wheat from the farmers both locally and surrounding districts. The town grew steadily and thrived on the emerging industries until the introduction of the railway system.

TOURISM & DEVELOPMENT

Port Wakefield is developing as a tourist destination with its easy access to Gulf St Vincent for fishing and water activities, it has a modern boat ramp, Tidal swimming hole, cool coastal breezes, access to Clinton National Park, Sapphire Coastal areas, tidal flats teeming with mangroves and wildlife, Nature walks and numerous coastal birds and a Heritage Courthouse Museum. It is also the stepping-stone into other popular tourist destinations. It is an easy drive of no more than 1 to 1 ½ hours to tourist destinations such as the Clare Valley, Copper Coast and the Yorke Peninsula.

The town (and surrounding areas) also has numerous industries developing. Major developments in recent years have included the Pork Industry with intensive farming and meat processing, poultry farms, Hay processing and exporting plants, an Intermodal Transport Hub, Quarry mines, and numerous housing developments.

THE COMMUNITY

The community of Port Wakefield is typically made up of what you would expect to find in a country town. There is a strong mix of second and third local family generations combined with a broad mix of people from different cultural backgrounds and locations. There is a mix of agricultural, fishing, retail and factory orientated employees who make up the community. Generally, you will find it an easygoing laid-back atmosphere with a strong emphasis on sporting and community participation.

Residents will normally be involved in multiple clubs and organisations, and will not only participate in the activities but will also have a co-coordinating or maintenance commitment. A town of such population (approx 600) could not support the number of groups and organisations it has without residents being involved with a number of clubs and organisations.

Apart from the clubs conducting sporting activities throughout the year, the community regularly holds events such as ANZAC Day, Australia Day and annual fund raising auctions.
